So, if the government collects a lot of money in one year, they can lower the tax rate for rich people a tiny bit. But they can currently only do it three times. This new bill wants to get rid of that limit, so they can lower the tax rate for rich people by a tiny bit every year, as long as the government collects a lot of money compared to the past three years. I oppose this bill because the government might not have enough money to pay for important things like schools, hospitals, and roads if they keep lowering taxes for rich people. Additionally, the gap between rich people and poor people might get even bigger if rich people get to keep more of their money. Finally, the government might have to cut spending on things that help poor people, like food assistance programs, to make up for the lost tax money.
