As the United States continues in its efforts to reshore advanced manufacturing, decreasing dependency of foreign entities and decreasing threats to national security, Missouri is well positioned to become a location of choice for several critical areas. Missouri is blessed with catalytic institutions such as world-renowned universities, innovation districts and centers that help drive innovation. We will need additional elements to compete against other mid-western states. To compete, we will need to provide additional incentives. Attracting advanced manufacturing companies to Missouri increases the number of high quality, high paying jobs available to the citizens of this state. The University of Missouri- St. Louis is developing three innovation districts that will become homes for companies engaged in advanced manufacturing. These include the manufacturing of active pharmaceutical ingredients (API), a center of excellence for controlled environment agriculture and the North St. Louis County Workforce and Business District. Additionally, UMSL, as a key partner with the Advanced Manufacturing Innovation Center (AMIC) in St. Louis, is helping to guide and design the Research and Development Program. AMIC serves as one of the key catalytic institutions needed to attract new advanced manufacturing companies to the region. Incentives that target business recruitment are on the critical path to success.

Honorable Chairman Hudson and Committee members, St. Louis Community College (STLCC) has a long history of making a positive impact on our students; the St. Louis region; and the state of Missouri. STLCC believes in, and is committed to, a well-trained workforce. Through our Workforce Solutions Group, we remain a resource for industry-specific training programs for many manufacturing companies in our region. If the committee is interested, we have numerous examples of partnerships that we can share with the committee or individual committee members. House Bill 1480, the Advanced Manufacturing Recruitment Act, seeks to incentivize companies with mega-projects in manufacturing to locate or relocate to Missouri. Upon passage of HB1480, STLCC stands committed and ready to be a training resource for future mega manufacturing projects. STLCC would like to thank Representative Christ for sponsoring HB1480 and submit this testimony in SUPPORT for the proposed legislation. Sincerely yours, Ryan McKenna
 St. Louis Community College Government & Community Relations Liaison
