As a practicing ophthalmologist, I believe that education of patients is the best way to help them understand the benefits, risks and complications of any medication, treatment or surgical procedure. With regard to Blue Light, many individuals do not understand what Blue Light is, let alone how they may be exposed to it or be effected by it. Electronic devices, such as smart phones, tablets and televisions emit short wavelength Blue Light which has been linked eyestrain, macular degeneration, cataracts and sleep disruption. Protecting the eyes with eyeglasses that have Blue Light blocking technology is one way to help reduce the risk of Blue Light effects.

Spreading the word about blue light and its impact upon not only eye health is extremely important and having a Blue Light Awareness Day would help to spread and generate public interest.
