I strongly support bill HB 337 that would provide certain state workers the option to work four-day weeks with ten-hour days. Different people thrive under different work conditions, and offering flexibility in scheduling will increase employee satisfaction, productivity, and overall well-being. A four-day workweek allows employees to better balance their professional and personal lives, reducing burnout and improving job retention. Many workers are more productive with longer but fewer workdays, and this model has been successfully implemented in both private and public sectors with positive results. Additionally, fewer commutes per week can lower transportation costs and reduce environmental impact.
